

EVALUATING THE IMPACT OF NATO'S PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

Report Published on 20 December 2012

PROJECT OVERVIEW

The Public Diplomacy Division (PDD) of the NATO International Staff identified the need to improve the way the effectiveness and impact of NATO's public diplomacy activities are evaluated so that they could more objectively report on the effectiveness of NATO's public diplomacy and enhance their public diplomacy activities. In April 2012, the JALLC was tasked by the Supreme Allied Commander Transformation, at the request of the NATO Assistant Secretary General for Public Diplomacy, to develop a comprehensive public diplomacy evaluation framework.

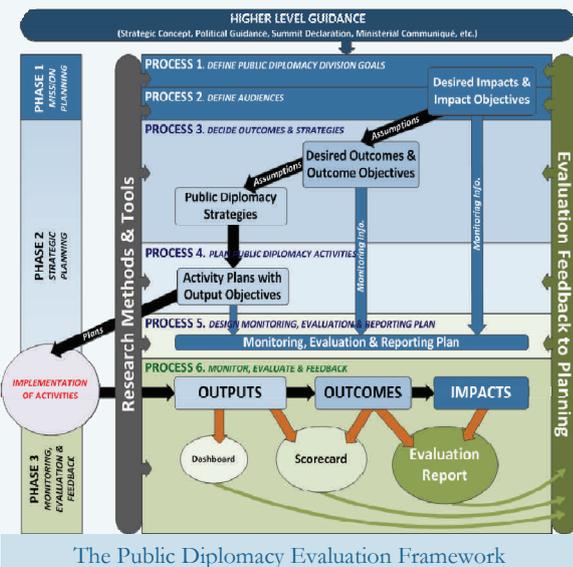

The JALLC researched and analysed various methods and approaches to evaluating the effectiveness and impact of public diplomacy and public relations used by both NATO and non-NATO organizations. The Public Diplomacy Evaluation Framework (referred to as the Framework) was then developed. The Framework is a theoretical construct for a total approach to public diplomacy evaluation comprised of:

- a theoretical foundation for understanding the relationships among goals, public diplomacy activities and intended and actual results;
- an evaluation methodology that includes a process for feeding evaluation findings into the activity planning process;
- procedures necessary to execute the evaluation methodology; and
- a selection of research methods and tools used to accomplish monitoring and evaluation of public diplomacy activities.

MAIN FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The project team found that, to be able to evaluate whether public diplomacy activities have the intended effect on a target audience, a logical evaluation plan needed to be prepared and followed using the concept of theory of change.

The theory of change provides the baseline for evaluation and allows the user to link public diplomacy activities to goals, monitor actual results against expected results and feed findings back into the planning process to improve the theory of change as well as improve the selection of public diplomacy activities. The Framework is designed to follow the aforementioned process, enabling public diplomacy evaluation and enhancement of public diplomacy activities.

Evaluation within the Framework takes place on two levels. First, Output Evaluation (Micro-level) determines whether the public diplomacy activities are having the intended immediate and direct results (outputs). Second, Impact/Outcome Evaluation (Macro-level) determines whether those outputs (immediate and direct results) from public diplomacy activities are having the desired outcomes and impacts expected from the theory of change.

MAIN FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS (CONT'D)

The Framework also includes feedback loops, derived from the evaluation findings, to improve public diplomacy planning on two levels. The first level of feedback focuses on public diplomacy activity enhancement and helps to make planned public diplomacy activities deliver improved immediate and direct results (outputs) by better selecting and implementing activities using lessons from evaluations. The second level of feedback focuses on public diplomacy strategies enhancement and helps in the design of more effective public diplomacy strategies and improve the theory of change by using lessons from evaluations of how the actual results (outcomes, impacts) compare with intended results from the theory of change.

PROJECT EXECUTION

The Framework was developed using data collected from interviews, desk research and subject matter experts, incorporating elements from a number of existing evaluation frameworks. It was reviewed by a selection of public diplomacy evaluation experts from Nations, international organizations and academia. The results have been published in two JALLC products: the first, the main report, describes the conducted analysis and how the Framework satisfies PDD's analysis requirement; the second, the Public Diplomacy Evaluation Framework Guide, is a practitioner's guide for using the Framework.
